SSP: An interval integer linear programming for de novo transcriptome assembly and isoform discovery of RNA-seq reads

Zahrae Safikhani, Mehdi Sadeghi, Hamid Pezeshki, Changiz Eslati

Department of Bioinformatics, Institute of Biotechnology and Biophysics, University of Tehran, Tehran, Iran
National Institute of Genetic Engineering and Biotechnology (NIGEB), Tehran, Iran
School of Mathematics, Statistics and Computer Sciences, Center of Excellence in Dynamical Systems and Continuum, University of Tehran, Tehran, Iran
Department of Computer Science, Shahid Beheshti University, CC, Tehran, Iran

SSP: An interval integer linear programming for de novo assembly and isoform discovery of RNA-seq reads

Abstract

Recent advances in the sequencing technologies have provided a handful of transcriptome assembly. However, reconstruction of full-length isoforms and the level of transcripts with a low cost are challenging tasks. We propose a novel method that incorporates interval integer linear programming to resolve alternative transcripts from short reads. Experimental results...